

NatWest Bank to sponsor the Energy Now Expo 2012

As support continues to grow for the 3rd annual Energy Now Expo next year, NatWest Bank has agreed to be the official sponsors for the 2 day conference, which will run alongside the exhibition and workshop sessions.

Ian Burrow, head of agriculture and renewable energy, RBS, said: "We're proud to support this event. The response by the agriculture sector to our £50m renewable energy fund shows there is appetite to move to a more sustainable way of operating – this event is a great opportunity for more businesses to understand the benefits of reviewing their energy options."

The bank joins a growing number of influential supporters for next year's event including the NFU, CLA, REA, BHA and the ADBA.

"We are thrilled to announce that NatWest bank has agreed to be the official conference sponsors" said organiser David Jacobmeyer, "and we look forward to welcoming them and their customers to the event".

The Energy Now Expo 2012 showcases the renewable energy opportunities available to farmers and landowners. It will take place on February 15 and 16 2012 at the Malvern Showground Worcestershire. Discounted conference admission rates are available for Energy Now subscribers, as well as members of the NFU and the CLA, with free admission to the exhibition for all everybody who pre-registers. See www.energynowexpo.co.uk for more details.